

PHILANTHROPIC LEADERSHIP DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS

A DIRECTORY OF PROGRAMS THAT DEVELOP DIVERSE LEADERSHIP IN THE PHILANTHROPIC SECTOR

COMPILED JANUARY-JUNE 2014

LEADERSHIP PREPARATION PROGRAMS—often referred to as “pipeline programs—are designed build the skills, knowledge, and experience of emerging and seasoned professionals so that they are better positioned and prepared to take on roles of increased leadership. These programs exist across all sectors – public, nonprofit, philanthropic, corporate, and academic – and many are tailored to specific industries. Pipeline programs are intended to increase the supply of professionals with enhanced skill sets and experience who are ready to advance their careers. They can be viewed as a source of promising candidates for leadership positions within organizations.

In early 2014, the D5 Coalition set out to identify pipeline programs that could serve as a source of promising and diverse candidates within the field of philanthropy. One of D5’s goals as an initiative is to foster the creation of more diverse and inclusive CEO and trustee leadership within the philanthropic sector. Many of our colleagues in the field have asked for more information about pipeline programs for diverse professionals as a way to support progress toward this goal and we launched a scan of existing programs as the first step to provide the requested information.

What follows is a directory of existing leadership preparation programs across the country that prepare or enhance the careers of diverse individuals in philanthropy. We included programs that specifically target the philanthropic sector as well as other programs that have direct relevance for the sector because either they have historically included philanthropy professionals and/or they might be a source of philanthropic leaders in the future. We also included programs that are specifically for diverse professionals as well as those that are open to mainstream audiences but have an implied focus on or secondary interest in diversity.

The directory is a work in progress that will be updated continually in digital form as we learn of additional programs and new information to include.

DEFINITIONS

PROGRAM TYPE

Programs tend to fall into two general categories, based on their structure, content, and duration:

COHORT PROGRAMS

These are selective programs to which participants must apply or be nominated. They typically include a defined course of activities, sessions, and learning opportunities over a set period of time. Less often, these programs allow for participants to engage in a self-designed, self-directed course of study. Participants are often structured as a cohort that progresses through the program in formats that allow for peer-to-peer interaction and learning.

MEMBERSHIP PROGRAMS

These programs are often membership focused, where participants elect to join or participate in a group with similar professional goals and interests. Like cohort programs, they emphasize skill building and networking, but through activities that are inclusive of broad audiences, such as conferences, workshops, and membership-focused activities.

SECTOR FOCUS

Sector Focus refers to the sector(s) for which participants are being prepared to serve as leaders at the staff or board level. We use the following definitions:

NONPROFIT: Programs that prepare for leadership in the nonprofit sector broadly, which may also include the philanthropic sector

PHILANTHROPY: Programs specifically intended to prepare for leadership in the philanthropic sector

PUBLIC: Programs aimed at preparing for leadership in the public sector, such as service on commissions

CORPORATE: Programs aimed at developing corporate leaders
